$1 MILLION IN SCHOLARSHIPS!

CitySquash Opens Learning Center and Launches Elementary School Program

By Peter O'Toole

Bronx, NY – CitySquash gets bigger and better every year. In September, just days after fond and tearful farewells were bid to the eight CitySquash team members headed to boarding school, CitySquash launched an elementary school program and began preparing to welcome a new class of sixth graders, increasing academic year enrollment to fifty students and expanding the organization for a fourth straight year. CitySquash also opened a new office and learning center in the Bronx, increased its full-time staff to six, and unveiled several new programs to enhance the CitySquash experience for the organization's participants.

Four years after CitySquash's launch, the program continues to provide its students with rich educational opportunities. Nine of CitySquash's twenty high school students, or forty-five percent of its first two classes of middle school graduates, now attend private schools on scholarships. Over the course of their high school careers, these students will receive more than one million dollars in financial aid, more than three times the size of CitySquash's 2005-2006 budget. The average annual aid award per student is $30,000.

Canterbury's Jose Alvarez, Salisbury's Edgardo Gonzalez, and Hill's Tanesha Jackson, all tenth graders, are the members of CitySquash's inaugural class attending private schools. Following in their footsteps are six CitySquash ninth graders, representing sixty percent of the program's second class of ten students. Jennifer Arboleda attends Williston Northampton in Northampton, Massachusetts. Diana Edwards goes to Loomis Chaffee in Windsor, Connecticut. Freddy Hernandez is with Jose at Canterbury in New Milford, Connecticut. Katrina Intal studies at St. Paul's in Concord, New Hampshire. Jesse Pacheco is at St. George's in Newport, Rhode Island. Angie Morales attends St. Pius V, a parochial day school in New York City. To help these students succeed in their new environments, CitySquash monitors their academic progress, checks in with them and their advisors regularly by email and phone, recruits alums of their schools to mentor them, and more.

For CitySquashers who attend New York City public schools, the program experience has never been better. Thanks to generous gifts from William and Anne Harrison, The Pinkerton Foundation and K2 Advisors, CitySquashers now have a place to read, study, and work on school projects during weekday evenings and on the weekends. The new office and learning center is located in the heart of the Bronx's Belmont neighborhood, four blocks from CitySquash's partner school, M.S. 45.

CitySquash added two full-time employees in September, increasing its full-time staff to six. More support from CitySquash means higher expectations of team members. Middle schoolers are required to attend a literacy session every other Friday, in addition to their two weekly afternoon tutoring sessions. Students who have an academic average lower than 75% attend an extra tutoring session each week. Team members have to learn fifteen advanced vocabulary words each month. Through the nutrition program, team members are encouraged to improve their diets. Fruits, vegetables and other healthy snacks are served at practices; soft drinks and processed foods are prohibited.

In what is perhaps the organization's most dramatic enhancement, CitySquash unveiled an academic year elementary school program for a select group of third, fourth and fifth graders who show special promise as squash players and students. The program is a once-a-week commitment for participants and incorporates the same academic, mentoring and community service components as the middle and high school programs, into which it will feed students. "We are thrilled about the elementary school program," said executive director Tim Wyant. "The earlier we begin working with children, the more they will be able to accomplish through CitySquash."

CitySquashers Meet Leaders and See the World

By John B. Stetson

Denver, CO – As he approached the peak of Treasure Mountain, halfway through his fourteen day trek through the Colorado Rockies, Freddy Hernandez was—on several levels—a long way from home. His Outward Bound group, two adult guides and eleven teenagers from Mexico City, San Francisco, Milwaukee and other places around North America, had been hauling thirty-five pound backpacks for miles each day through the mountains, waking up at dawn, setting up and breaking down tents, cooking meals over open fires. The three-hour hike to the top of Treasure Mountain, over Yule Creek and past the Alpine Lakes, was grueling. For most New York City teenagers, this was not a normal summer day.

But the feeling of being outside of his comfort zone was not new to this three year veteran of CitySquash. For Freddy, as for his teammates, CitySquash is as much about trying new things as improving grades, as much about seeing the world as tweaking squash strokes. In the past year, CitySquashers visited twelve states outside of New York, as far west as Washington, as far north as Maine, as far south as Maryland. The program entered players in sixteen squash tournaments throughout the Northeast, totaling 203 individual entries. CitySquashers played an average of five tournaments each, frequently being hosted overnight by families. Forty-four families billeted CitySquashers over the course of the year.

Fordham University's beautiful campus in the Bronx, where the majority of CitySquash's practices take place, is a striking departure from the urban environment found in most parts of the borough. As in past years, the team spent weekends bunking at Groton, a boarding school in Massachusetts, and at Harvard. Dartmouth, Princeton, Yale, Columbia, Bowdoin and Williams were among the other universities CitySquashers visited. Twelve team members attended summer academic programs, including ones at Rye Country Day, Westover, Kent and A.G. Oliver. Eighteen took part in overnight squash camps. Five attended Outward Bound courses, spending as many as twenty-two days canoeing, rock climbing and hiking in the wilderness.

CitySquashers enjoyed less structured, more leisurely summer experiences as well. Diana Edwards and Jesse Pacheco spent four days with the Darling family in Nantucket. Seetreeon Torres and Alija Hogans stayed with the Calders in Essex, Massachusetts. The Douglasses hosted Chris and Jose Fernandez on Long Island. Four summer campers spent an afternoon on the Ticonderoga, a historic sailing boat. The Briggses, Frantzes, Galluccios, Mandels, Stuarts and Steels all had team members up to Greenwich for swimming. The Morris and Bogles did the same in Bronxville. Kingsley Amoako, a sixth grader, can't get enough of the trips: "They are really fun. I get to go to places I've never heard of. We meet people on the trips. They are nice."

Team members also had the opportunity to meet remarkable individuals through CitySquash's speaker series program. The day after 60 Minutes profiled Somali-born human rights activist Ayaan Hirsi Ali, the former Dutch parliamentarian, named the 2005 European of the Year by Reader's Digest, spent the morning at CitySquash's summer camp. E.U. Competition Commissioner Neelie Kroes visited CitySquash twice. Renowned urban poet Willie Perdomo led a writing workshop. John Wertheim, a senior writer for Sports Illustrated, reflected on his craft and career. Andrew Walter, a managing partner of Blue Orchid Capital, led a discussion about Malcolm Gladwell's analysis of physical genius. Former world #1's Jonathon Power, John White and Peter Nicol talked about how they reached the top of the squash world.

CITYSQUASH BASH

By Robert Ford

New York, NY—Headlined by the brightest stars in squash—and its sister sports—the 3rd Annual CitySquash Bash matched its billing, raising more dollars, attracting more guests, and generating more enthusiasm than any previous CitySquash fundraiser. Held at the Racquet and Tennis Club in Midtown Manhattan, the event was attended by 586 people and featured world-class exhibitions in singles and doubles squash as well as racquets and court tennis, the predecessor sports to squash and tennis, respectively. After Scotland's John White, one of the world's best players, played singles with Canada's Jonathon Power, widely regarded as one of the most charismatic and entertaining players in history, the two foreign nationals partnered on the doubles court and took on Preston Quick, currently the top American doubles squash professional, and Morris Clothier, a Racquet Club member and one of the best doubles players of all-time. The teams split games, 1-1—and helped raise nearly $200,000 for CitySquash.

My Ode to Books

I know my hands hurt when I hold you
You make me smart when I see you
You are everywhere I go
When you die I will cry
You are my best friend
You make me fall asleep at night
You sing songs
You can be famous sometimes
You can even be on a poster
But you are always my best friend
You will go place to place
You will go school to school
You may travel country to country
You mean a lot to me
It may take a long time to look through you
If I move, on my way to a new house
I will always have you beside me
Sometimes you're scary,
But other times you're very kind
Sometimes you talk about sports
You always make me shine
When I am asleep you are beside me
My brain can hear you
But my mouth loves you
You are so lazy but you say so much
Sometimes you say things very small,
I cannot hear you
But other times you say things very big
And I can hear you good and clear
I want you to know
You are my best friend

Laura Polanco, 4th grade

Ethiopia

I'm from Ethiopia,
Which is located in East Africa.

I'm from a place with a million grasshoppers,
But I like the hamburgers.

I'm from the East,
There are a lot of beasts.

I'm from a place with friends,
My adventure never ends.

I'm from a place with less holidays,
But what I like more are the Saturdays.

My family is respectful,
To the land they live on because it's beautiful.

I'm very generous,
Even to people that aren't famous.

Kariam Yihune, 5th grade

Bananas

Monkeys treat me like a snake eating a rat.
I am grown in a tree like an apple.
You can open me up like a box.
When I am snapped open,
I sound like a bullet being fired.
When I am not ripe,
I am green as grass.
If you leave me out too long,
I turn brown like an apple.

Michael Kelly, 4th grade

Squash Racquet

My body is as hard as a rock.
My head is oval like an egg.
I come in different colors like a rainbow.
Inside my head there is a web like a spider's.
I am as powerful as a gorilla,
And as gentle as a butterfly.
When I was young I was made out of wood,
And now I'm older and lighter.
When my owner is mad,
I tend to fly around,
Like a bat in a square cave.

Chris Fernandez, 8th grade

Where I'm From

I am from where people carry goods,
In a basket to sell.
And where in the oceans you can find,
Different types of shells.
Where people are being killed,
And some won't tell.
And where people are locked,
Inside a cell.

I am from where people speak Spanish,
And talk in slang.
Where there are houses with fancy gates,
That they knock with a bang.
Where young children come together,
And join a gang.
Where on top of the house,
The clothes hang.

I am from where people join together,
To celebrate.

Criseles Polanco, 7th grade

PROGRAM EDITORIAL

Doing More, Starting Younger

When CitySquash launched in 2002, all sixteen of our team members were sixth graders at Middle School 45 in the Bronx. Things have changed. Middle School 45 remains CitySquash's primary partner school, but our fifty full-time academic year participants now range in age from eight to sixteen years old and attend nineteen different public, private and parochial schools located in and outside of New York, from P.S. 205 right here on Fordham Road to St. Paul's School in Concord, New Hampshire.

While our team members are increasingly spread out, the intensity and richness of CitySquash's programming has not been diluted. More than ever before, CitySquash is committed to our philosophy of providing a relatively small group of children with intensive year-round programming. CitySquash's four original areas of focus—academic tutoring, squash, mentoring and community service—have been joined by several new ones. Our middle school team members now take part in a literacy program every other Friday afternoon. The cultural enrichment program exposes CitySquashers to New York's museums and performing arts shows. The speaker series program introduces our students to business, political, sports, religious and literary leaders. The nutrition program teaches healthy eating habits. The high school placement program guides those who wish to apply to private high schools, and supports them if they gain admission. The college prep program provides tutoring for the SAT, develops writing skills and leads college tours.

To help oversee and implement these programs, we added two new people to our staff—a high school academics director and squash director—increasing our full-time staff to six. The student to staff member ratio is eight to one. We also opened a neighborhood learning center that has computer work stations, quiet study spaces and volunteer tutors on hand to provide team members with academic support in the evenings and on the weekends. In addition, the learning center is home to presentations, student and parent meetings, and Movie Night, a showing of critically acclaimed films on Fridays.

The past four years have taught us that if we want to change lives, we have to continually strive to make our programming more intensive, more personal, more direct, more sustained. It was with this in mind that we recently launched an academic year elementary school program made up of a select group of third, fourth and fifth grade students who excelled in our four-week day camp last summer. These talented and motivated young people will be a part of CitySquash for up to ten years, until they matriculate in college. We have never been as excited about CitySquash's ability to make a difference.

Jesse Pacheco relaxes with teammate Danel Gimenez after the Terry Fox Run. Jesse had a remarkable eighth grade year, leading her teammates to the Urban Team National title, winning the Urban Individual Nationals and CitySquash's Academic Excellence Award, and gaining admission to St. George's School with full financial aid.

Racing towards my goals

By Jesse Pacheco

Bronx, NY— Last fall, I found out that everyone on the CitySquash team was going to do The Terry Fox Run, a five kilometer run for cancer research in Central Park. Five-kilometers sounded really far. When we started training in our school yard, I found it hard to run for even ten minutes. I didn't think I would be able to run the whole 3.1 miles without walking. But we kept training. The more we ran, the easier it became. Terence gave us mental and physical drills so that we would not only be in shape, we would also have the confidence to make it through the race without giving up. He told us not to think about how hard the running felt, but to think about how proud we would feel when we crossed the finish line. The week before the race, we visited the reservoir in the park to do our final training run and to get an idea of what the run would look and feel like.

On the day of the race, we pinned on our numbers and met with mentors and friends who had come to run with us. I was nervous and excited. During the run, I felt really, really tired, but I knew that I would be able to finish, and I never let myself stop to walk. Thanks to all of our training and all of Terence's "You can do this! Don't give up!" the whole team got through the run. At first we thought the whole race was just one of the ways our coaches could torture us, but after it was over we realized that it was actually another way for them to show us that if we set our minds on something, we can achieve it.

Over the past three years, CitySquash has challenged me and helped me reach my goals. One big goal that I set for myself was getting accepted to boarding school. Doing the applications, studying for the SSAT and making all the visits with Courtney was a lot of work, but I just did what CitySquash has taught me and focused on the steps to the finish line – March 10, the day the decision letters were sent. I couldn't believe it when I found out that I got in to St. George's.

I know that there will be a lot of new challenges at St. George's, but I am ready for them. CitySquash has taught me to play a really fun sport. It has helped me do well in school. It has taken me to tons of new places – Philadelphia, Boston, Williamstown, Groton, and more. I have stayed on college campuses and in the homes of some really cool families, where I have met a lot of new people. I have made close friends on the team and at tournaments. It has improved my manners, taught me hundreds of new vocabulary words, and even given me the chance to go to a great high school. But most of all, CitySquash has given me confidence. My three years on the team have helped me feel more comfortable trying new things and meeting people. Just like being at a starting line of a race, I always know that with the right preparation there is nothing that can keep me from reaching the finish.

Jesse Pacheco is a ninth grader at St. George's School in Newport, Rhode Island. This article was adapted from a speech Jesse delivered at the CitySquash Bash on May 18, 2006, at the Racquet and Tennis Club.

NOW IT'S MY TURN

By Michael Kelly

Bronx, NY—I learned about CitySquash from my older sisters. Nina tried out for the team two years ago and made it. Then my other sister, Myriam, tried out the next year and she made it. When Nina and Myriam came home at night, I would see all of their gear. I was fascinated by all of the stuff. I was like, "I want to play squash." But I wasn't old enough (I am nine). It made me feel a little sad that I couldn't be on the team with them.

I got to play squash for the first time a year ago in the summer squash camp. Now I have done CitySquash's summer camp twice. At camp I have a lot of fun and make new friends. The coaches and teachers treat me well. They help me get my confidence and do stuff I have never done before, ever. Sometimes, I say "I can't do this." But then I think of CitySquash, and that helps me believe in myself.

The first day I played squash I felt really excited (but I got really tired doing the warm up). Since then I have been playing squash whenever I can. My first tournament was the Bronxville Future Stars. I tried my best. I actually didn't win a match in the tournament, but I had a lot of fun and that is what counts.

CitySquash gives me the excitement of going to places that I have never gone to before. I like doing the trips to Greenwich Academy and stuff

Thank You and Welcome

CitySquash gratefully acknowledges Brian Mathias for four years of dedicated service. Brian joined CitySquash in 2002 when the organization launched, working first as Director of Squash and then as Director of Community Service. With his deliberate, warm and gentle manner, Brian generously shared his love of squash, passion for teaching, and concern for others.

Brian was, as one staff member put it, the 'conscience of CitySquash.' He continually challenged the organization to define and be true to its core values. It is because of Brian that each year CitySquashers raise thousands of dollars for AIDS and cancer research, volunteer hundreds of hours to clean up the Bronx and serve its poorest residents, and rally scores of other young people in the neighborhood to do their part for the community. Brian left CitySquash to pursue other coaching opportunities and a music career. We are pleased that he will remain involved as a volunteer. Thank you for everything, Brian!

CitySquash warmly welcomes two new full-time staff members. Kathy Hill graduated from Harvard University in 2004 and taught English for two years at I.S. 162 in the South Bronx through Teach for America. Kathy manages CitySquash's learning center and runs the high school academic program. Kari Betts is a 2006 graduate of Brown University, where she majored in Developmental Psychology and played varsity squash. Kari runs CitySquash's squash program and assists with fundraising.

CitySquash thanks the people and organizations that made our fourth year a success.

Fundraising Year: September 1, 2005 – August 31, 2006

Patron levels are based on the total amount of funds given to CitySquash during the fundraising year. We sincerely regret any errors. If you notice any, please contact us at info@citysquash.org or 718-220-7400. We also regret that we do not have the space here to acknowledge the hundreds of people who volunteered for the program during our fourth season. You are greatly appreciated!

Together, CitySquashers give their all in giving back

At the Terry Fox Run in Central Park, CitySquashers were joined by numerous mentors and volunteers, including Ryan Byrnes, Rob Endelman, Marc Levin, Brannon Cook, Andrea Levin, Chris Wyant, Mariana Loose, Michael Brigoli, Phil Bednarczyk, Ana Guerrero, Kelly Sennatt and Sebastien Cahill.

By Joan B. Aez

New York, NY – Community service is central to the CitySquash experience. Last year, the program's sixth and seventh grade team members participated in five Saturday service projects, and the eighth and ninth graders completed more than thirty hours of independent volunteer work. Projects ranged from picking up trash in the neighborhood to serving food at a soup kitchen, from planting in a local garden to stacking books at the public library.

What made The Terry Fox Run in Central Park special was how it brought together in one project so many different aspects of CitySquash's programming and mission. Students conducted research, learned about a civic leader, developed sales skills, rallied others to contribute to a worthy cause, improved their physical fitness, worked as a team, and personally challenged themselves to do something difficult that they'd never done before.

CitySquashers worked hard to make The Terry Fox Run a successful service project, starting with preparations five weeks before the October 15 race. First, they learned about cancer and studied Terry Fox, a cancer patient and leg amputee who attempted in 1980 to run the length of Canada to raise money for cancer research. Sadly, Fox's health failed during the run and he had to stop after 143 days and 3,339 miles. He died a year later at the age of 23. In his honor, millions of dollars are raised every year at Terry Fox Runs around the world.

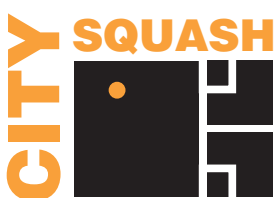

Inspired by Fox's courage and the knowledge that they could personally make a difference in the fight against cancer, CitySquashers set out to do their part. They got on the phones and solicited people for donations. They asked their parents, teachers, and friends, as well as CitySquash supporters. It was a real life experience in sales, and CitySquashers performed well. Bit by important bit, the money came in.

Meanwhile, CitySquashers prepared physically for the 3.1 mile race, a distance almost none had ever jogged before. At the first training session, most team members struggled to run half a mile without stopping. But day in and day out, they met up after school to train together, and their fitness steadily improved.

CitySquash's volunteers and mentors pitched in as well. Not only did many contribute personally to CitySquash's fundraising drive, quite a few joined the team and ran in the Saturday morning race as well. Every CitySquasher completed the 3.1 miles, and the team raised over $2,000. "It was a great opportunity," community service director Brian Mathias said, "for our team members to transfer the athletic discipline that they develop on the squash court to the service of a greater cause."
